STORY ABOUT A HALF-CRAZED SOLDIER AND A NERVY OFFICER.

Officer Had a Delicate Task to Get Away from a Rifle Muzzle Pressed Against His Breast.

"Talking about real nerve and courage," said a man at the Hotel English last night, "I heard a story from an army officer the other day that was full of it. The incident took place in Cuba just after the close of were yet quartered on the island. As the ne day and was causing a reign of terror

the country the officer located the man in a Cuban household. The sol-

"The officer knew that he had a dangerous task, but he had been sent out to take the man and he knew he could not go back and say he had found him, but could not capture him. While he was debating as to what was best to do the women came out of the house, excited and frightened, and soon the man himself appeared. 'Good afternoon,' he said to the officer. 'What are you doing here?' the other asked. 'I got a other and the officer finally made some comment on the man's rifle. Finally the officer said, 'I'm curious to see how much your gun weighs. Would you mind my taking it. When I was in military school we had rifles that were a little different from that.' 'You move a step and I'll blow your brains out,' the man declared, and as he spoke he placed the muzzle of the weapon against the officer's breast.

'Just then the officer, looking over the man's shoulder, saw a sergeant step from the house, and an instant later the sergeant placed his gun to his shoulder. The officer knew that the sergeant was about to shoot, and he said to himself that if the sergeant did shoot he was very likely to get the benefit of his bullet. Now, here is where the shrewdness of that officer was apparent. As he talked and parleyed with the frenzied soldier, the muzzle of the rifle at his breast all the while, he kept shaking his head so that the sergeant would understand that he was not to shoot. The sergeant understood the signal and lowered his weapon. He then crouched as if he would spring on the soldier, and looked to the officer for the word. The officer talked on and slowly nodded his head. As he saw the sergeant was about to spring he suddenly jumped out of the way of the gun and caught the soldier about the waist. The gun was discharged, but the bullet did

"The soldier finally gave up and was taken in. He got a long sentence, and when the government decided to pardon its soldier prisoners this one was among the bunch. One of the first things he did after securing his release was to go to the officer who had taken him and ask for work. This was equivalent to an apology and the officer helped the poor fellow out. Finally the man became broken in health and the officer sent him to the hospital. When he recovered the officer helped him back to the > sive, but it is worth much to a woman to be rid of a careworn expression. Moreover, to feel that her youth, and therefore her beauty, is somewhat restored has a beneficial influence upon her mental state. But whoever fancies that the modern husband is to be pitied for the cost of his wife's beauty preservatives should consider the toilet expenses of a Roman lady in the comparatively early days of the world's history. Excessive as may appear the time and money spent now upon the art of beauty cultivation, the grooming of a modern woman of fashion seems invested with an admirable simplicity compared with the time and money thus expended in the days of Poppaea and Agrippina.

of slaves assisted at the toilet of a lady of fashion. On leaving her bed, which was usually at noon, she immediately went to her bath, where she was carefully rubbed with pumice stone. She then put herself in the hands of the cosmotes, a class of slaves who possessed many secrets for preserving and beautifying the complexion; therefore their functions were considered vards of material 27 inches wide, 5% yards of the greatest importance, especially as they claimed for their arts hygeian ad-

In the dim back ages of the world of civilization beauty was made a cult of the utmost moment, but for many a century after the downfall of the Greek and Roman empires such matters were allowed to languish. Not until the declining years of the nineteenth century was the subject reinstated as one of paramount interest. But to-day beauty specialists abound-some for face treatment, others for manicure, and again many more for electrolysis. Of course, these treatments are expen-

An Impromptu Coronation.

curious sort of impromptu corronation in which his Majesty King William IV figured. Grey's government after the second reading of the first reform bill had been carried by a majority of one in 1831, and one Friday in April they suddenly got the King to go down and prorogue Parliament in person, Somebody went off to the tower to fetch the crown, and, with a scratch body of attendants, his Majesty drove down to the described in G. eville's "Memoirs." "The King ought not properly to have worn the crown, never having been crowned; but when he was in the robing room he said to Lord Hastings: 'Lord Hastings, I wear the crown; where is it?" It was brought to him, and when Lord Hastings was going to put it on his head he said: 'Nobody shall oh, shades of Araby! And, lastly, the fat | put the crown on my head but myself.'
